A Bogus Preacher Whose Villainies Are Exposed in Chicago.

Luring Young Girls to Ruin While Pretending to Convert Them.

CHICAGO, March 2.—A morning paper prints a seven-column expose of the career of the Rev. C. B. Calusac.

Calusac pretends to be the son of a nobleman and to have an income of $10,000 per annum.

He was later in Cleveland, O., where he married Nellie Bailey, deserting her after two weeks.

He has preached at St. Clement's church in Ninth street, and at the headquarters, on Lamale street, he has been a frequent and honored visitor.

He was taken in a carriage to a newspaper office last night, where he confessed the whole story and asked to have it suppressed.

He has made a business of luring girls to their ruin.

THE DEATH OF GOV. ENGLISH.

Removing a Distinguished Character

[SPECIAL TO THE EVENING WORLD.]
NEW HAVEN, Conn., March 3.—The death of ex-Gov. James Edward Ensworth removes one who had been a noteworthy figure in New Haven streets and a distinguished character on the Democratic side of State and National politics.

he State, in 1807, 1808 and 1871, defeating Joseph R. Hawley in the year first mentioned, and becoming the only Democratic governor in the United States.

He served in Congress from 1861 to 1865, and in the United States Senate from 1873 to 1877, being appointed to fill the vacancy left by the death of Senator Ferry.

Previously to his wide range of legislative duties he had served as Selectman and later as

Gov. English was born in New Haven nearly seventy-eight years ago, and has spent his residence there, except that in 1830 he established a lumber business in Albany, N. Y., and remained there nearly four years.

Gov. English made liberal donations during his life to Yale College and to public enterprises in New Haven.

He was probably the richest man in Connecticut, though he began life as a carpenter's apprentice. It was his pride that all his money came from strictly legitimate business operations, and not a dollar from speculation.

He founded the New Haven Clock Company in 1853 and encouraged many manufacturing enterprises in his State.

THINKS HE WAS MURDERED

Victor Cravath's Uncle Discredits the Theory of His Suicide.

Police Capt. Copeland, of the Charles street station, began to-day a further investigation of the alleged suicide of Victor Cravath, a young machinist from St. Louis, rough his head, in front of 169 Perry street on the night of Feb. 17 last.

William R. McNiece, a lawyer, at 36 Broadway, requested an investigation in consequence of a communication from ex-Judge Bell, of Mount Carmel, Ill., uncle of a dead man, who writes that from the absence of powder marks about the bullet wound he believes the young man was murdered.

Deputy Coroner Jenkins says the case was undoubtedly one of suicide, an opinion endorsed by the Police Captain. The powder marks, Mr. Jenkins says, could have been made by the undertaker.

The body was sent to Mount Carmel for interment.

Young Cravath's father was once wealthy and prominently connected with the Alabama cotton and real estate business.

Victor had been about a week in this city from St. Louis, when he shot himself. He was out of work and dependent.
